A homeless orphan in Kenya becomes a lucrative businessman, only to give it all up and open an orphanage that today serves over 2000 Kenyan children.

It's one thing to hear about it, but quite another to experience firsthand. Poverty-stricken parents making the gut-wrenching decision to give their child away. What could be worse than walking away from your child? I can think of two things: watching your child die of hunger or seeing him or her sold into human trafficking so he or she can be fed.

My colleague witnessed the drama unfold in real time as overwhelming pain gripped the hearts of parents when they handed their child over to Mully Children's Family (MCF), a place they knew their child would be cared for and not exploited, making it the only viable option with their lack of resources.
